“ NCLA is a positive force for the Northern Colorado Region. It is the only entity that is able to bring together all the major cities to work toward the betterment of the economy and free enterprise system for the region. I am proud to have served on its board as a director and very glad I can make a positive impact toward forming a Regional Transportation Authority to our region through the NCLA — Don Marostica, Former Director of Colorado’s Office of Economic Development and International Trade (former State Representative from District 51, Larimer County) ”

About NCLA

In 1992, the boards of directors at the Fort Collins, Loveland and Greeley Chambers of Commerce had the foresight to create the Northern Colorado Legislative Alliance to lead and influence regional, state and federal policy on issues affecting the unique business interests of Northern Colorado. Over the years, the NCLA has established itself as the voice for business and is sought after on issues that affect all of Colorado. Upstate Colorado Economic Development and Northern Colorado Economic Alliance have been added to the NCLA partnership in subsequent years.

What Sets The NCLA Apart

What makes the NCLA notably unique – and is directly related to its effectiveness – is the delegation of all policy-making authority to the NCLA board of directors without a hierarchy of approvals by the individual chamber typical of other regional groups. Such requirements would delay action and hinder swiftness in responding to quickly-moving legislative action.

The NCLA’S Mission

NCLA’s mission is to unite and empower the members of the Northern Colorado chambers of commerce and economic development corporations with the means to generate a strong voice for a positive impact on state and federal policy, regulations, and legislation that affect business’ ability to succeed and to help create a more positive business climate for the future of northern Colorado business.

How The NCLA Operates

The NCLA board of directors is comprised of six representatives from each of the three participating chambers of commerce, plus the chamber CEOs and the CEOs of the two economic development corporations for a total board of 23 directors. The Alliance periodically updates its policy statements that serve as the guiding principles by which the NCLA board of directors determines its annual priority agenda. The policy statements also help the NCLA respond to legislative proposals introduced in the Colorado General Assembly. The NCLA’s priority agenda evolves from year to year to reflect the northern Colorado business community’s top concerns and the changing dynamics of the business and political climate.
